

Adobe Lightroom

I use Lightroom (not classic tho) to store all of my photos and I pay for the 2TB plan as part of my Creative Cloud license (this costs more than the basic). It's pretty good. I don't recommend for slightly more complex photo processing (use Lightroom Classic if you want, but really any complexity you can't achieve in LR, just use Photoshop). You can still use Bridge for bulk processing - though it doesn't always work the way you think (as is traditional with Bridge).

Like Classic, this better looking Lightroom: You can still copy and paste settings and select which settings you want to copy and paste. Like copy and paste attributes or copy and paste values, etc. Pro-tip: applying those settings to >1 photo simultaneously requires grid view. Bad design.

If you have a ton of photos in your sync'd Lightroom library and desire a local copy, there's a secret Adobe app called Lightroom Downloader. This will download your entire library to a target folder local to your computer (or an external). Note that:

- Every time you do this, you do the entire library. It doesn't look for changes or new photos and just backup those for subsequent backups.
- You need to leave it running, without a restart, until it's done. Quitting and continuing is unlikely to be successful.

Revision #1

Created 2025-04-14 15:17:02 UTC by Cam Vokey

Updated 2025-04-15 21:00:35 UTC by Cam Vokey